Iran little girl killed by police officers who opened fire on the car where she was traveling with her parents in Hormozgan province. After the death of Mahsa Amini The Iranian regime's violent crackdown continues. According to what was leaked, Saha Etebari was killed yesterday on Christmas day while some plainclothes officers shot at the car in which there was also the family of the twelve-year-old. The bullets hit the car and then the body of little Saha. The news was also picked up by independent journalists in Iran, including Ali Javanmardi. Emergency services arrived immediately on the spot but the rush to the hospital was in vain. Saha died soon after from severe bullet wounds. Her parents were in shock. A dynamic similar to that of the young Kian Pirfalak who was 9 years old, also struck while in the car with his family, in Izeh. The queen in this case had blamed the protesters but the mother of the child has told another version: "Security forces repeatedly fired at our car, killing my son and wounding my husband." The child's father was seriously injured. In these hours, the photo of the young woman has circulated on social media Saha Etebari. The little girl had black eyes and wore a white veil. In her hands he held an open book. Saha Etebari's father then shot a video posted on social media in which, however, he ruled out any correlation between the killing of his daughter Saha and the ongoing protests in Iran: "For every innocent killed, tortured, raped, disappeared from Iran, there is a family tormented by pain but also by the intimidation of the regime". The shock complaint appeared on social media. Activists in Iran have in fact reported the killing of the young woman. The 12-year-old girl reportedly died on Christmas Day, killed after regime operatives opened fire on the car in which she was traveling with her parents. Tweets about the killing of the little girl have multiplied on Twitter. The tragic episode took place in the province of Hormozgan.
