¹ The Islamic Consultative Assembly (Majles-e Shoraye Eslami) also called the Parliament, is constitutionally vested with the power to legislate. However, another body, the Council of Guardians, must affirm that any legislation passed by the Assembly is not in conflict with the principles of Islam and the Constitution. The Assembly's members (currently 290) are elected by popular vote to serve four-year terms. Only candidates whose Islamic background has been approved by the Guardian Council can stand for election, other than the five seats set aside for religious minority communities.

² The Council of Guardians (Shoraye Negahban) is a body of twelve theologians and jurists, half of whom are appointed by the Supreme Leader of the Islamic Republic and half by the Islamic Consultative Assembly. Besides having the authority to veto legislation which it considers inconsistent with the Constitution or Islamic law, the Council screens all potential candidates for the Islamic Consultative Assembly, the Presidency, and the Assembly of Experts (a body of 86 clerics charged with electing the Supreme Leader and supervising his activities).

³ The Assembly for the Discernment of Exigencies of the State (Majma'e- Tashkhis-e Maslehat-e- Nezam) was established in February 1988 by decree of Ayatollah Khomeini to resolve a series of disputes between the Consultative Assembly and the Council of Guardians which were paralyzing the legislative process. The Assembly was also decreed to act as a legislative body in some matters and to enact laws without passing them through the Consultative Assembly. All its 34 members, including the Head of the Judiciary, are appointed by the Supreme Leader.

⁴ The Islamic Criminal Code, the main criminal statute in the Islamic Republic of Iran, was initially issued as separate laws in 1982 (The Law Concerning Islamic Punishment) and 1983 (The Law on Huddud and Qisas and The Law on Ta'zirat) on a trial basis for five years. In 1991 these laws (with the exception of the Law on Ta'zirat) were brought together in the Islamic Criminal Code, again on a trial basis for five years, after vetting by the Guardian Council. The trial term has since been extended six times, in 1996 for ten years and since 2006 for one-year terms. In 1996, the 1983 Ta'zirat law was replaced by a new permanent law and inserted in the Islamic Criminal Code as volume five of the Islamic Criminal Code after vetting by the Assembly for the Discernment of Exigencies.

⁵ The Iranian calendar (hijri shamsi) is made up of 12 months commencing on 21 March in the western calendar. For each corresponding western date, the Iranian date is included in brackets in the form day/month/year.

2. Uncodified Law (primary source)

Tahrir al-Wasileh (Commentaries on the Vehicle) ⁶ (reference in this document are based on the hard cover four-volume Farsi translation by Ali Islami.)	Written in the 1960s in Arabic by the late Grand Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini (1902-1989)	Standard reference is in the form of three numbers ###/###/###, (e.g.: 4/200/5 = volume 4, page 200, issue 5.)
--	--	--

⁶ Tahrir al-wasileh (Commentaries on the vehicle) is Ayatollah Khomeini's (1902-1989) most comprehensive treatise. It consists of his commentaries on Ayatollah Seyyed Abul-Hassan Isfahani's (1867-1946) book Wasilat-al-nijat (Vehicle to salvation). It was written in Arabic during his exile years in Turkey in the 1960s and was initially printed in two volumes in early 1980s. Later reprints have four volumes. Each volume consists of several books, sections, and masaleh (issues) formulated as solutions to concrete or speculative questions. There are at least two known Farsi translations by Ali Islami and Seyyed Mohammad Baqer Mousavi Hamedani. Both translations were published in four volumes by the Qhom Theological Seminary. The Encyclopedia of the World of Islam regards Tahrir al-wasileh as "one of the best practical jurisprudential texts" and "the only one addressing the entire range of topics in Islamic jurisprudence".

II. Table of Capital Offenses (135 offences)

1. Qisas (four offenses)

Qisas (literally, ‘retaliation’) is defined in the law as a punishment ‘equivalent to the crime, which God has prescribed for jinayat (murder or bodily harm).’ Qisas-e nafs (‘retaliation with a life’) is the Islamic term for mandatory capital punishment in qatl-e amd (‘intentional homicide’).⁷

¹⁴ The Qur'an (5:33) says: The punishment of those who wage war against Allah and His messenger and strive to make corruption in the land is only this, that they should be killed or crucified or their hands and their feet should be cut off on opposite sides or they should be banished from the land; this shall be their disgrace in this world, and in the hereafter they shall have a grievous chastisement.

¹⁵ Tahrir al-Wasileh, 4/239/1.

¹⁶ 1991/96 Islamic Criminal Code, Article 190 and Tahrir al-Wasileh, 4/241/5.

¹⁷ Mohareb is someone who commits moharebeh and mofsed is someone who commits ifsad.

¹⁸ Members who have not engaged in armed activity are excluded.

¹⁹ Punishable under the new provision of 'extensive acts against internal or external state security'. See section III.1.

3. Ta'zirat (99 offenses)

Ta'zir (plural: ta'zirat. Literally 'chastisement') is a punishment imposed for 'an act or an omission that is prohibited in the sacred Islamic shari'a'.²⁰ Ta'zir punishments are not specified in shari'a and are left to 'the discretion of the Islamic judge'. Islamic jurists generally agree that ta'zir is a 'lesser' punishment than hadd and statute law states that ta'zirat are punishments 'such as imprisonment, fines and lashes, the degree of which shall be less than hadd'.²¹ Most capital crimes in the Ta'zirat section of the Islamic Criminal Code or other related shorter pieces of legislation are applied on the pretext that the gravity of the offense makes the offense 'tantamount' to the hadd crime of moharebeh, or ifsad-e fil arz, or both.
